It is simply wrong to state that Gilstrap has lost his case. He lost only the ability to pursue a class action in New York federal court on theories that implicated the defendants' intent. We can disagree about the effect of the opinions in the class action on Gilstrap's ability to pursue his individual claims in New York or Texas, but I think we can agree those opinions were not on the merits. Gilstrap's substantive claims are unaffected whether pursued in the United States or England. In any event, we strongly disagree that there is anything in those opinions that address a forum non analysis of Gilstrap's claims as individually plead, especially if brought in Texas where he was employed by Radianz.
